BANK TELLER Charlene Hohler fights back tears as she tells sheriff's deputies how a young man grabbed a can of quarters from her station and dashed out the bank this morning.

BANK OF AMERICA branch manager Dave Redmond tells Sheriff's Capt. Bill Davis, left, and Deputy Don Oliver how this morning. Redmond chased the bandit across the parking lot and up El Caminito, getting a final glimpse of the culprit as he chased a fleeing robber out the door shortly after 10 a.m. as he ran across a field headed west.

LOU WOLFE pushed the alarm when she saw an unarmed bandit race from the Carmel Valley Bank of America clutching a can of quarters. Among the first law enforcement officials on the scene was Sheriff's Deputy Don Oliver, right.

'Two-bit' bank robber creates Village uproar

The Carmel Valley Village branch of Bank of America was robbed of $160 in quarters shortly after 10 a.m. this morning by an apparently unarmed bandit who escaped on foot up El Caminito.

Bank teller Charlene Hohler said the suspect, described as a young man in his early 20's with brown hair worn in a pig tail, approached her counter shortly after the bank opened.

"He said something indistinguishable," she said, and then turned and walked over to a counter as if he planned to fill out a deposit slip.

At that point, she left her window for a moment, and the robber returned, snatched up a can containing $160 in unrolled quarters, and dashed out the door leading to the parking lot.

Bank manager Dave Redmond, alerted when teller Lou Wolfe pushed an alarm button, chased the robber across the parking lot and north on El Caminito. He was last seen fleeing on foot, running west across a vacant lot.

As of 1 p.m. this afternoon, he had not been apprehended. During the course of his hasty escape, the robber spilled some of the quarters by the door to the parking lot, and the remainder were found scattered at the edge of El Caminito where he cut across the field.

The suspect was wearing an old Army-type jacket and trousers which were torn in the back near the waist. He had a red bandana tied around his forehead.

TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor:

We can feel kind of proud of our principal of Tularcitos School, Mr. Tom Williams, for the only principal who wrote from his desk with vision, inspiration and hope for better things to come.

Immediately, I got the book, "Schools without Failure" by Dr. Glasser and found it revealing with new insights into most anybody considering himself a failure.

Mr. Williams isn't dreaming. There are schools where children love to attend and learn amazingly. I've known them, known children who were punished by being deprived of a day at school. They had work to do there which was important to them.

What can we of Carmel Valley do to implement education in becoming the adventure, exploration and discovery for teachers, parents, children and the community with more than willing enthusiasm, cooperation and accomplishments that school can really be?

SOME DRIVERS are a real menace to roadside riders.

FEEDBAG

By Lucy Smithson

NOBODY LIKES to ride beside the road but sometimes you have no choice. Well, actually you have three choices; get a horse trailer, trespass on other people's property, or ride on the shoulder of the road. What a bummer. The roadside has something awful for everybody no matter how quiet and sensible El Pluggo is.

When you must ride along the shoulder of the road, it will show some smarts to walk your horse. A little accident at a walk can be a big accident at a trot or canter. A slip or fall on the hard surface will cause more expensive injuries the faster you go. Also we have heard of a horse being loped beside the highway who shied and threw his rider into the path of an oncoming car.

It would show a whole lot of smarts to get off and lead the horse. He is less likely to slip and fall. You are in a better position to soothe him about strange sights and sounds. While leading you will probably not lose control if he does freak out. A horse out of control on the highway is not a preferred risk for life insurance.

Broken glass if often found beside the road. Don't let your horse step on it. The sole of his foot is not as tough as the sole of your boot. The glass may puncture his foot. Check for nails and puncture wounds after each ride. Small wounds you clean and disinfect and pray to the Great-Veterinary-In-The-Sky that that's the end of it. For deep wounds you call the local veterinarian immediately.

The gravel on the road shoulder is just the right size to get caught in your horse's hoof. If gravel doesn't make it those doo hickies off the eucalyptus trees will. Carry a hoof pick in your pocket.

WE HATE LITTERBUGS who drink beer from non-aluminum cans. The boy scouts won't pick up their leavings. If a horse's hoof strikes a can it may skitter flinkity-clankity across the road. And the horse will climb a tree.

You'll meet lots of hazards along the road that will make a horse as spooky as Halloween. How about most motorcycles, or trucks with flapping tarps, engines that backfire, or flocks of sheep that come running up to the fence to see a horse go by?

Slow moving tractors with front loaders or back hoes will scare a horse into moving a lot faster. We are happy to report that the pick up and rig which chews tree branches into mulch -- whine, crunch! crunch! crunch! screech! whine, -- is owned by a horse lover. Wait, wave to the crew because they can't hear you, and they'll stop feeding the machine until you pass.

DOGS ARE A SPECIAL problem. Every cyclist, horseback rider, and jogger would like to see a leash law passed. Some dog owners (Class A) contain their dogs and approve of leash laws. When you see a dog owned by the other kind of dog owner (Class B), half halt your horse. Give the horse a chance to see the dog too. When the dog charges at you barking turn the horse to face it. Some horses, especially mares, would be willing to attack the dog in return. Naturally you leave your own dog at home when you must ride beside highways or settled areas.

Wear clothing for visibility. We have a favorite coat of fire engine orange. Everybody in Carmel Valley has seen it -- from two miles away. White is absolutely essential for night riders. There's nothing to be ashamed of in draping a horse in a sheet or bandaging his legs in white strips if it gets him home safely. If you know you will be out after dark provide yourself with a flashlight. The flashlight is not to light your way but to shine on you announcing your presence to drivers. Reflector tape on stirrups and tail also warns drivers "Here we are, heads up!"

Seven a.m. is a safer time to ride than seven p.m. Anytime before Happy Hour is safer than after.

Some drivers are real menaces to roadside riders. They lean out and shout things or throw trash at the horse. They race their engines as if to prove that Vroom Vroom has more status than horses. Some idiots even honk. We don't know how to get the word to drivers like these. They're obviously too dumb to read it here.

THE ORGANIC GARDENER

In Carmel Valley

By Lee Hall

SPRING VEGETABLE GARDENER II

LAST WEEK we mentioned laying out the garden plot with the rows sloping gently down from a water source. With a south slope garden tall plants won't shade out smaller plants just to the north as much, but with a north slope garden, the location of tall and short plant rows is even more important.

Remember that the sun gets more directly overhead as the spring goes on and plants getting their full growth only in the middle of summer are not as likely to shade out others.

An example would be pole beans that cannot be planted until the soil becomes warm.

Something that matures fast like radishes, or early like turnips, carrots, or beets, can be planted in the row north of pole beans and be harvested before the beans give a shade problem. In fact, some bush beans produce so much faster, and quit early, that they can be planted north of pole beans for early and late green beans. The pole beans keep beaming until frost.

Ideally a good layer of compost has been turned under well before planting time and the soil has had time to "settle." If the plot has weeds they should be turned under unless they have gone to seed. Don't turn weed seeds under because they remain viable for years just waiting to be brought back near enough to the surface to germinate. If the weeds have gone to seed, they should be pulled and composted.

If compost is cut or turned under, a period of about three weeks should be allowed before planting to allow the soil to settle.

If no compost is available at planting time, some 14 day compost can be started when the seeds are planted.

By the time the plants are at the seedling stage (two leaves in many plants), the compost will be ready to spread between the rows. Compost should be spread about 2 inches deep on top of the ground. This will furnish nutrients for the little plants and will prevent weeds from sprouting. Small weeds already sprouted will be covered and killed also.

Seeds should be planted in rows about twice as thick as wanted because some will not sprout, and if they are too close together they can be thinned as soon as true leaves appear (after the two leaf stage).

Seeds should be planted about two times as deep as their broadest diameter. The exceptions to this last statement are the cole crops (cabbage, broccoli, etc.) which can be planted somewhat deeper.

The top of the garden should be kept moist but not wet until the seedlings appear. Watering after seeding is best done with a sprinkler because the seed is very shallow and deep furrow irrigation is not needed. If compost has been used previously, crusting of the top soil will not occur and the seedlings won't have any trouble emerging.

If the garden soil has much clay and not enough compost it will crust over and some plants can't break through. The crust can be broken by very gentle and shallow raking of the surface.

Nearly all plants "rest" a few days after the first two leaves appear. During this time the roots are going down and water should be available down to six inches or one foot. Sprinkle or furrow irrigation can be used at this time.

A rule of thumb for sprinkle irrigation is that one inch of water penetrates six inches. A coffee can or any straight sided container can be put in the sprinkle area. When there is one inch of water in the can, water has penetrated six inches underground; two inches in the can, one foot underground.

In sandy soil the water goes deeper, but needs to be watered more often; in clay soils the reverse is true. Compost corrects these variations in either type of soil as well as holding the water for maximum use by the plants. In other words, compost prevents waterlogging and rapid dry-out.

It is simple to determine if the garden needs water. Before the seed sprouts dig down about 1/2 inch and get a sample of soil. Squeeze the sample in the palm of the hand. If water can be squeezed out, it is too wet. If the soil crumbles when the hand is opened, it is too dry. If the ball retains its shape with just a few bits crumbling off, it is just right. The same procedure works at any stage of growth except the sample is selected deeper as the plants mature, down to eight or nine inches.

For trees, we use a soil probe (a hollow pipe that is pushed into the ground) at one foot depth. Many tree roots are deeper than that, but we think that if the soil is dry one foot deep, it needs water.

Actually most of a tree's root activity is one or two feet underground simply because the roots must have oxygen to function (and get rid of carbon dioxide) and there isn't much air movement deep.

We mentioned that plants usually "rest" a few days at the two leaf stage. If they continue to "rest" for over a week, and the weather isn't too cold, they probably need phosphorous. For small plots this means bone meal cut or poked into the soil. For first year organics and larger plots, ammonium phosphate can be put underground. The ammonium phosphate is much cheaper but won't last as long as bone meal. The chemical will burn so should not be put closer than 4 inches to the plant.

Plants that start to turn light green and then yellow, old leaves first, need nitrogen. Blood meal or hoof and horn meal furnish nitrogen organically or ammonium sulfate or ammonium nitrate are chemical nitrogens. Any of the above can be put on the surface around the plants and watered in. Chemicals will burn so should not be closer than 4 inches from plants.

Hidden Hills now seeks Valley water

The California Public Utilities Commission today ordered an investigation into the adequacy of the water supply in the Monterey Peninsula District of California-American Water Company.

The investigation is prompted by an application by the water utility for a certificate to serve Hidden Hills, 2000 acres with an ultimate development of 1700 new customers.

The PUC staff said its studies indicate that the present water supplies are not adequate to meet the continuing growth within the general Monterey-Carmel service area.

The Commission action today consolidated the investigation with the utility's application and set hearing for Tuesday, April 24 at 10 a.m. in the Council Chambers, Room No. 5, City Hall, Pacific and Monterey Avenues, Monterey, before PUC Examiner Edmund Catey. Cal-Am was ordered to make a full report at that time.

The PUC investigation is to determine:

"(1) Whether Cal-American's available water supply is adequate and sufficient to enable it to serve new customers in additional areas for which a certificate of public convenience and necessity is being sought or for other areas in which the water utility would normally serve.

"(2) Whether the utility's presently existing water supplies are adequate to meet the normal continuing growth within areas heretofore certificated to it.

"(3) Whether there are available additional sources of supply to meet future growth in the general Monterey County area and whether it is feasible to obtain such sources of supply by the utility."

California-American Water Company, one of the larger water utilities, provides water service on the Carmel-Monterey Peninsula to approximately 26,000 customers. Its service area extends to Carmel Highlands on the south, Seaside on the north, and the entire Carmel Valley to the east.

The basic water supply comes from the Carmel River and is stored in two dams. To supplement this supply, the utility has wells of relatively poor quality in the Carmel Valley and a small well supply in the Seaside area. In general, there is a limited underground basin for producing a well supply.

For the past five years, Cal-Am has been studying the feasibility of a new dam to augment its water supply.

The Corps of Army Engineers is also studying the feasibility of a large multipurpose dam to combine water supply with recreation and flood control.

Because of the very large investment necessary to build a new dam, Cal-Am has delayed a decision until the Army Engineers reach a tentative conclusion about a multipurpose dam.

CVPOA expresses grave concern:

New Area Plan permits 100,000 people in Valley?

By PAT GRIFFITH

DIRECTORS of the Carmel Valley Property Owners Association voted unanimously last night to urge the Monterey Peninsula Area Planning Commission to conduct a study on the holding capacity of Carmel Valley.

Until it is known how many people this area can accommodate comfortably, directors said, the Area Planning Commission should not make any changes in the existing Carmel Valley Master Plan.

The CVPOA directors were sharply critical of the proposed new Peninsula Area Plan, which indicates a potential population of over 100,000 for Carmel Valley, based on "incentive credit" for developers to cluster housing on hillsides.

The present Carmel Valley Master Plan would permit an ultimate population of around 60,000, based on a general pattern of one home per acre on land up to a 30 percent slope, and one home for every 2½ acres above that. This plan does not coincide with existing zoning, which is almost entirely one unit per acre throughout the Valley, regardless of slope.

CVPOA president Bill Brown said that several people have protested the potential increase in density at hearings before the Area Planning Commission "and nothing every happens. Everyone keeps screaming about it, but they don't listen."

FIRST AID CALLS

On March 25th at 1:13 p.m., the Carmel Valley Fire Department was called to the home of Dave Berta on Carmel Valley Rd. He was transferred to the Community Hospital with what was reported to be possible appendicitis.

On that same day, Joseph B. Nolls of 53 Hitchcock Canyon, while horseback riding, sustained a puncture wound on the left knee received from a tree. The fire department was called and administered first aid. He later went to a local doctor for treatment.

FIRES

The Fire Department was called to the residence of Cpt. F. Mack Lansdowne on La Rancheria on March 29 at 12:28 p.m. There were no occupants in the house at the time and the cause of fire is believed to have been that of an electrical short. The damage was reported to be around $25,000.00.

CVPOA vice president Lyn Eldridge said that it appears that the proposed new area plan has designated Carmel Valley as the principal growth area for the Monterey Peninsula.

"If this is where the population is going," he said, "why can't we as homeowners have some say in the matter?"

"It seems to me the whole premise is wrong," commented director St. E.P. Tyner. "The first thing you've got to decide is how much population will this area stand? There is just a certain number of people who can breathe the air in this Valley and drink its water and drive cars and go to the bathroom.

Besides asking for a study on the Valley's holding capacity, directors agreed to include a question about density in a questionnaire which will be mailed to all CVPOA members within the next two weeks.

SEVERAL OTHER controversial subjects were discussed during the course of the lengthy meeting at Tularcitos School.

The recent action by the County Planning Commission approving a use permit and tentative subdivision map for Thomas Schaal's Carmel River Project adjacent to the Carmel River Inn was brought up for discussion by Brown.

Brown urged the directors to appeal the use permit before the Board of Supervisors on the basis that traffic generated by the 71-unit condominium development, coupled with traffic resulting from other construction underway at the mouth of the Valley, will more than double present traffic in the vicinity of Rio Road and Highway 1.

Directors, however, were reluctant to have the CVPOA carry the appeal.

"The people in Mission Fields should be the ones to appeal," Eldridge said. "If they can't fight it, why should we? I think we lose credibility by opposing things that are marginal to Carmel Valley. On some of these things, I think we should say that if it conforms, let it be, and support orderly development . . .

"We're opposing too much, and then when something really important comes along, such as the Area Master Plan and holding capacity, they don't pay any attention to us because we have no credibility left."

"If they fill up the mouth of the Valley, maybe they won't come out here and bother us in the Village so much," commented Dolores Anderson.

A different view was taken by CVPOA treasurer Karl Hall, who argued that "no matter how many causes the board has, if they are good causes in the eyes of our members, we should represent them."

Directors finally agreed to write the Mission Fields Property Owners Association and the Carmel Planning Commission to ask them to appeal Schaal's use permit. Directors said that if someone else will file the appeal, the CVPOA will lend moral support at the time of a public hearing.

ON OTHER MATTERS, directors:

1. Endorsed the position of the Lower Valley Advisory Committee, in recommending denial of a use permit application by Y.R. Azcarate for a cement batch plant at the rear of the Wolters' ranch.

2. Agreed to write the State Division of Highways supporting the position of the Carmel Knolls Property Owners Association on the Hatton Canyon freeway. The Carmel Knolls group has been urging that the new road be made a high priority project, and that it be designed for scenic, rather than high-speed considerations.

3. Voted to notify the Board of Supervisors of their continuing opposition to the use permit for Arthur Oppenheimer to haul dirt from the San Carlos Ranch. This permit comes up on appeal before the board on April 24.

4. Heard a report by Brown that the County Road Department, PG&E, Pacific Telephone Company and the Carmel Valley Disposal Service are interested in a six-acre parcel at the end of Schulte Road, near the Carmel River, as a possible site for a corporation yard.

"If you want services in the Valley, you're going to have to give something someplace," Brown said in asking the directors to give the matter additional thought before reaching any conclusions.

5. Learned that Hidden Hills is forming an assessment district to buy water from the California-American Water Company. This is in contract to the original conditions placed on the subdivision which said the area would have to provide its own water.

6. Discussed the need for an additional road for Robles del Rio, and agreed to study the matter further with residents of that area. Mary Sigourney suggested that residents might be able to form a district to pay for an emergency exit which could cross the dry riverbed in the summer, when the fire danger is greatest.

7. Agreed to poll the CVPOA membership on its feelings about the Canada de la Segunda highway before deciding whether or not to urge the County Road Department to expedite that road project.

8. Set April 24 at 8 p.m. at Carmel Valley Manor for the next quarterly membership meeting. Supervisor Willard Branson will be guest speaker.

Valley ranchers beef over boycott

CARMEL VALLEY ranchers are reacting to this week's meat boycott with a mixture of frustration and stoicism.

Frustration because they feel the public protest over the price of beef is coming just as many ranchers are realizing their first real profits from cattle in many years.

Stoicism because they don't think the boycott is going to have any long-term effect anyway.

"The boycott basically just means that people don't want to pay the present prices in the store," John Marble, owner of the vast Rana Creek Ranch in upper Carmel Valley says.

"But meat prices are not historically high right now. If you go back for a 20-year period, you'll find that beef was selling way low. Until the end of '72, cattlemen were getting less for cattle than they did in 1951."

During that same time period, Marble continues, prices on equipment have shot up, so that a new tractor costs four times today what it did 20 years ago.

Marble feels that the current price of meat is due, in large part, to an unprecedented demand for more beef. "Twenty years ago the per capita consumption of beef was 60 pounds; last last year it was 115 pounds."

Although cattlemen have "more than doubled" production in the last 20 years, Marble says, "at the moment we are caught up in a supply and demand factor."

Marble said what many consumers don't realize is that it takes a long time to increase beef production.

If a rancher wants to send more calves to market, he has to save a heifer calf, let her grow up for two years, then wait another year until she has a calf, and then raise the calf for a year until it's ready for market.

If the boycott continues for any length of time, Marble believes that many of the nations two million cattle producers will lose their incentive to try to raise more beef.

"Also," he notes, "we have been getting about 10 percent of the beef in this country from Australia, mostly for hamburger and the cheaper steak houses.

"The world price for beef is higher than the U.S. price, which means that someone in London or Paris pays more for a steak than we do here.

"So if prices do drop very much here, it would lead exporters such as Australia to ship more beef to Europe, and then we would lose that 10 percent of available beef. That, in turn, would push prices back up again.

"IN THE PAST," he concludes, "the boycotting of commodities has never lasted very long. But if it should, it may have the effect of reducing the supply in a later year."

Many of Marble's comments were echoed by Mrs. Vivian Holman, who feels that the housewife protesters don't understand the problems of the ranchers.

Mrs. Holman said that this year she is paying $51 to $56 a ton for hay, which usually has run about $35 a ton.

She received 32 cents a pound for the calves she sent off to market last fall, she recalls, and out of that she paid trucking costs, a commission, yardage charges and inspection fees.

"Personally I don't eat steaks unless it is a special occasion because they are expensive," she laughs. "But everything is going up. Bacon has gone up very high. Cheese is $1.39 a pound for sharp cheddar.

"I think a lot of the price increase is due to packaging. People want everything trimmed and wrapped just so.

"But I think women are wrong in boycotting food. They're forcing some slaughter houses to close down, and stores are letting clerks go. There must be a better way to protest prices than by throwing people out of work."

BETTY WILSON of Rancho Chupinos says she shares the frustration of housewives over high prices in supermarkets, but her anger is directed towards packaged foods.

"I'm going to boycott packaged foods, boxes half full of air with no nutrition," she says. "But why should we boycott meat, which is one of the most nutritious foods?"

She doubts that the boycott will have any effect on prices. "I just don't see how they can go down, what with the floods in Mississippi and the hard winter in Texas. This year they lost so many cattle in Texas.

"No, I can't see beef prices going down, unless everything else goes down too -- taxes, repair bills, everything."

Fred Nason, a Cachagua cattleman, expects prices for beef on the hoof to go right back to the 45 cent level where they were about two weeks.

"There may be a drop of 4 or 5 cents a pound for awhile, but I've heard of ranchers who have signed contracts at 55 cents a pound for feeder cattle for fall delivery, in September and October and November.

"So prices really can't go down, or otherwise there are going to be a lot of cattlemen going broke along the way."

Nason expresses the view of several other ranchers in the upper Valley when he adds:

"I think it's time we got a little break ourselves. Last year was the first good year we've had in quite a spell.

"A lot of people have been losing money or sometimes just breaking even. Now last year and this year, maybe we can earn a little bit, so we can keep up with the prices on everything else."

UNDER THE OAKS & AMONG THE CACTI

By Mildred Hattan

IT WAS A UNIQUE experience for Marjorie McKiernon who recently crossed a bridge in Arizona -- which she had crossed many years ago in England. The structure of course was the London Bridge now located in Havasu City visited by Marjorie and husband, Capt. (U.S.A. ret.) Thomas McKiernon on their trip to Mesa, Arizona to visit Marjorie's brother. The Buena Vista Del Rio residents found their entire journey paved with a spectacular display of wildflowers -- the hillsides of Coalinga were blanketed with blossoms; the mountains near Bakersfield resembled a multi-hued painting; the showing at Needles was outstanding; and the heavy winter rains have turned the Mojave Desert into a veritable paradise (praise enthusiastically supported by Alice and Irwin Johnson who recently made the same tour). The Valley-ites returned with best regards to their many friends from former Laurel Drive residents, Elva and Lin Dickie who now reside in Sun City.

INVITATIONS worded "Come with a song in your heart -- and dressed as your favorite tune" prompted a search of old sheet music, records and closets for costumes which would identify the melody each guest portrayed at the harmonious birthday celebration of Richard Dick. The guest of honor was of course easily identified as "Happy Birthday to -- me," while his wife who planned the clever theme was, "Get Me To The Church on Time" -- in pink padded bridal attire. Their daughter Nancy, husband, Peter Herb, son, Billie, and his guest, David Anderson, stole the show when they sailed in from Lafayette in a cleverly constructed "Yellow Submarine." Even their dog Pepper joined the fun as "That Doggie in the Window" -- with his head through a plastic window pane and a balloon tied to his tail! The Dicks' son, David, his wife, and son, Mathew drove to the party from Cupertino.

Olene's mother, Mrs. Ann Reinertson was "Annie Get Your Gun" and Mrs. Edward Ewer of Walnut Creek was "Baubles, Bangles and Beads." While seated for dinner by candlelight at numerous small tables -- each with a different colored cloth and bright bouquet, there were strains heard of "In Your Easter Bonnet" -- from Ruth Hermanson's pretty chapeau of fresh flowers; "A Gay Ranchero" -- Jack Hermanson, dashing in a sombrero; "Me 'n My Shadow," Mrs. Philip Walker; "Brown Eyes, Why Are You Blue," Alice Johnson; "Davey Crockett," that frontiersman, Irwin Johnson; Melvin Dick, "Sleepy Time Gal;" Rosemary Clifford as "The Lady in Red," and George Clifford as "South of the Border."

"GREEN IS FOR SPRING -- or Saint Patrick's Day," a motif so timely that it even encouraged the numerous green orchid plants on Mrs. Philip Walker's lanai to burst into bloom for the pleasure of the 56 guests who attended the March benefit bridge and canasta party. PRETTY MAIDS in a dramatic corner of the beautiful West Carmel Valley Road gardens of Mr. and Mrs. David Taylor -- a sight like "The Garden of Eden" -- which just happens to be the theme of the May 5 Flower and Garden Show to be sponsored in the multi-purpose room at Tularcitos by the Carmel Valley Garden Association. Qualifying to take home the exotic gifts were Esther Del Monte, Doris Templeman, Bernice Leoni, Ruth Wade, Edna Smith, Margaret Brown, Esther Price, Francis Wilson, Martha Huff, Vera Stokes, Helen Fitch, Edna Williams, Natalie Compass and Nellie Mirani. Special awards were presented for high in bridge to Margaret Brown; second to Bernice Leoni; and high in canasta to Natalie Compass and second to Vera Stokes.

The group will meet again on April 25 with Carlyle Mothersill hosting the post-holiday party assisted by Charlotte Spangler and Kathryn Walker.

CARMEL VALLEY COMMUNITY CHAPEL GUILD

The Carmel Valley Community Chapel Guild will meet on Wednesday, April 11, at 12:15 p.m. in Fellowship Hall, with dessert being served under the chairmanship of Mrs. William Meyer, assisted by co-chairman Mrs. Elbert Wade, Mrs. Mabel Love, Mrs. Freida Manderville, and Mrs. Pearl Covey. Mrs. Paul Olsen together with Mrs. Alton Walker will give the program which will be slides and explanation of the 1970 Passion Play in Oberammergau, Germany. The Passion Play is presented every ten years, and while Mr. and Mrs. Paul Olsen were stationed there (Mr. Olsen was associated with the Military Red Cross) it was never when the play was presented. After retiring to Del Mesa in Carmel Valley they took a special trip in 1970 to see the Passion Play. There they met Mr. and Mrs. Alton Walker, from Pebble Beach, and they have co-ordinated their slides of the event. Mr. Walker has taken pictures of the town and surrounding area as well as the actors going into the theatre and shows these as an introduction to Mrs. Olsen's slide and talk giving the background of the play and why it is presented.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS WEEK AT CARMEL MIDDLE SCHOOL

Public Schools Week will be observed at Carmel Middle School with a "School Fair" on April 12. Families and friends

ATTENTION all talent scouts! The Tularcitos Carnival Committee is indeed in luck. That world reknown troupe of thespians known as the "Mellow Fac-tors" (faculty actors) will present one performance (and one performance ONLY) at 2:00 p.m. Saturday during "Hurray for America Day." "The Perils of Prudence Pure Heart" -- the melodrama all America knows and loves -- was the selection of Susan Venturelli, who carefully cast Principal Tom Williams as "Grandma;" Faintin'Phil Smith as a damsel in distress; Friendly Fran Raymond, who comes to the rescue (NO! NO!

Fran, the RESCUE) and "a boy named Sue Venturelli" -- the hero of this moving dramatic experience. (Costumes selected from the outstanding merchandise at the Student Council Rummage Booth!) Hiss the Villain at the Tularcitos Carnival on Saturday! Remember the day begins at 11:30 with a parade led by the Fort Ord Band -- Game Booths -- Rummage Sale -- Country Store -- and ends with a Potluck Dinner beginning at 5:00 P.M. Wear RED, WHITE AND BLUE and join the crowds at HURRAY FOR AMERICA DAY!

JUST AN ORDINARY day for Valley-ite Paula Snowden and her daughter, Erica, Tularcitos 7 year old: get up, eat breakfast, sort a load of clothes for the Mid-Valley Laundromat, look through the magazine rack while waiting for the machines to do their thing -- when ZONK! -- such an extraordinary thing happens that it is no longer an ordinary day! Tucked among the magazines, Paula discovered a 1967 UNICEF calendar which SHE had put in the garbage can several years ago. Paula said that it was the one year that she had faithfully jotted daily notes, appointments, reminders, etc., and has no idea how it escaped from its garbage truck fate to return to her with six year old memories. Sequel, anyone?

THE MEN who came to dinner -- Lou Allaire and Charlie Gansel -- found that they were honored guests in a fitting tribute to their years of service by fellow members and wives of the 'Bucket Brigade,' The Carmel Valley Volunteer Fire Department. Lou -- on call 24 hours a day for 23½ years and Charlie for 15½ years (for both the fire department and first aid rescue squad) were awarded plaques by Fire Chief Chip Collins and radios designed like antique fire engines as a reminder of an appreciative department and a grateful community. The ladies auxiliary planned the "Around the World Potluck" dinner featuring dishes from France, Greece, Hawaii, Mexico, and Italy. The buffet table was beautifully decorated with a handsome antique globe of the world and flowers by Mrs. Stan Roberts and Mrs. William Parham. The dinner also acknowledged the re-election of the Auxiliary officers headed by Mrs. Richard Hindman, president.

"KEEP THAT ARM STRAIGHT!" "Keep Your Eye on the Ball!" "Follow Through!" Such a lot of things to remember thinks Amy Berg as she works her way through a basket of tennis balls while Leah Turner waits for some individual attention from Coach Mel Thau.

TENNIS ANYONE . . . ? The well-aged query brought an enthusiastic response from Tularcitos sports lovers who have added a Tennis Club to the lengthy list of after school activities. Mel Thau of the Recreation department for the Carmel Unified School District instructs the "racquet squad" as well as assisting with Ruth Pryer's Tumbling class. Think fast.

The powerful BMW Bavaria cruises all day at 120 mph. And still has power reserves to give you extra bursts, up to 130.

What makes it all happen is a completely different kind of engine. The most efficient internal combustion engine in the world. Built around BMW's exclusive triple-hemispheric combustion chamber.

This kind of power presumes a suspension system that can keep the car on the road. Even a rough road. BMW has it in our race-bred suspension, the finest in any car built.

All planned, schemed, devised and designed by our BMW engineering geniuses, who have dreamed up more ways of going fast on land, sea or in the air than any other people we know of.

The BMW Bavaria may be the best way they've thought of yet. If anybody tries to sell you anything different, think fast.

Large group holds meditation in Valley

The Carmel Valley Inn was the setting for a three-day course in transcendental meditation attended last weekend by 72 members of the Students International Meditation Society.

The resident course was coordinated by Karen Hudson of Monterey and taught by David Rosenkranz of Carmel and John Eric Moss of Carmel Valley.

Following an orientation program Friday evening, students spent two days in meditation and gaining an intellectual experience about meditation from video tapes of Maharishi Mahesh Yogi.

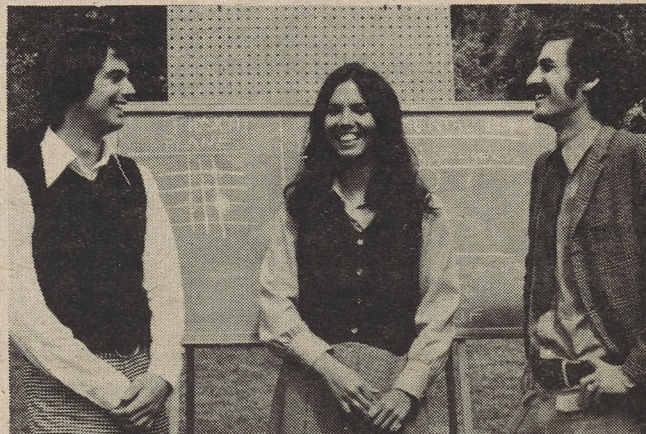

Moss, a graduate of Antioch College in Ohio, is the son of artist Molla Moss of Carmel Valley. Rosenkranz studied music at the University of Idaho before becoming a teacher of transcendental meditation. He has taught for 2½ years in New Mexico, Hawaii, Texas and California.

Two free lectures on transcendental meditation will be given next week by Moss and Rosenkranz. The first will be Wednesday, April 11, at 7:30 in Grant Hall of All Saints Episcopal Church in Carmel. The second is set for Thursday, April 12, at 7:30 p.m. in the Monterey Public Library.

The lectures are sponsored by the Center for Transcendental Meditation on the Monterey Peninsula, 130 Fountain Ave., Pacific Grove.

BALMY WEATHER added to the enjoyment of students who attended a three-day course in transcendental meditation at the Carmel Valley Inn. This group is having an intellectual experience about meditation from instructors David Rosenkranz of Carmel, left, and John Eric Moss of Carmel Valley.

Village advisory group will draft final recommendations

Members of the Carmel Valley Village Study Advisory Committee will make a final review of its recommendations for a master plan for the Carmel Valley Village at a meeting Monday at 3:30 p.m. at the Blue Sky Lodge.

The committee will review comments made at the public meeting on the plan March 9 before voting on final recommendations to be submitted to the Monterey County Planning Commission.

Key elements of the proposed plan include drawing guidelines for a northern bypass road along the airstrip, setting a maximum density of six units per acre on undeveloped commercial property in the Village, and encouraging multiple residential development west of Pilot Road and east of Esquiline.

The committee has also recommended that owners of small pieces of undeveloped commercial property within the main Village area be encouraged to upgrade their zoning to Planned Commercial, a designation which calls for landscaping and off-street parking.

The advisory committee's meeting is open to the public.

Renaissance folk dances, under the instructorship of Marikay Bridges, will be performed by the modern dance classes on the girl's athletic field.

Also on the athletic field will be sports activities such as tugs-of-war that will be open to all contenders, sponsored by the physical education department.

There will be a display of art, ceramics, fabrics, clothing and agriculture, entitled "The Self-made Person" in rooms two and four. Instructors who have worked with the students for this display are Bill Stone, Lloyd Baskerville, Susan Williams and Al Graham. It will be coordinated by April Masten.

Roving musical groups, under the direction of Henry Avila, will entertain and "Eco" boats and Egg Safety Drops will be presented by the humanities class that is instructed by Peter Lyon and Michael Casey.

Shakespearean scenes will be acted in room 6 by Buzzy Rainer's Shakespeare class. Actors and actresses participating will be Sam Mudd, Linda Peacock, Ann Scheffer, Tracy Heniford, Alrick Jones, Mark Scheiter, Pat Darragh, Anne Pomeroy, Geoff Blakeslee, Russ Graell, Tracy Roberts, Katie Horan, Lili Coe, Mimi Bommerbach, Amy Bommerbach, Becky Walker, Sue Elwood, Sarah Dane, Mark Fuller, Glen Mead, Alan Hebert, Robert Harris, Wade Gaasch, Chaco Mohler, Mona Mehdy, Kelly Goulding, Ellen Sherman, Tracy Heriford, Bruce Wagner, Breth Henry, Derek Poole, Alan Hebert, Karen Bevelander, Casey Curtis, Diana Guisi, Carrie Shook, Christoph Tanner, Karen Bevelander, Renee de Bord, Robert Courtney and Cyn Satchel.

Students, faculty and guests are encouraged to attend the Faire in Renaissance costumes to add to the spirit of the day.

Funseth exhibit opens in PG

Carl Funseth, a frequent visitor to the Peninsula from Spokane, Wash., will show his paintings at a preview and reception Friday from 5:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. at the Fitzgerald Gallery of Fine Arts in Pacific Grove.

Funseth's exhibit will officially open Saturday.

A nature painter, Funseth has made a specialty of painting the scenes and buildings of early and contemporary Spokane and the Northwest.

As an artist, Funseth (who was in banking and finance for 17 years) has been influenced by the work of Andrew Wyeth and Eric Sloane.

The public is invited to the reception.

LETTER FROM SACRAMENTO

By Bob Wood

Assemblyman, 34th District

Although our paths don't cross very often, I have had a chance to get to know Attorney Evelle Younger, the Attorney General, a little better this last couple of years. Recently 4 or 5 of us had an informal lunch at his office and discussed many facets of law enforcement. Recently the Attorney General has come out with some statements which I think are worth your consideration and I thought I would pass them on to you.

Attorney Younger said, "we don't know much about correcting human behavior. People have been assaulting, robbing, raping and killing other people for hundreds of years and apparently we don't seem to have learned much about how to make them stop." "But," Younger concluded, "while we wonder what made a man a ruthless, violent criminal, let's isolate him and make sure he isn't killing innocent people while we wonder." Younger contends from 50 percent to 70 percent of all violent crime in our society is committed by narcotic addicts trying to finance a habit, and he argues, "the first duty of any government is to protect its citizens -- not to close all prisons, not to rehabilitate all criminals -- the first duty is to make it safe for the law-abiding citizen to work, move about safely, enjoy his family and friends and the fruits of his labor."

Younger is admitting and defending a fact which I think many of us have recognized for a long time: prisons exist for the protection of society first, and for the rehabilitation of criminals, second.

The Attorney General said, "last year less than 20 percent of those persons convicted and sentenced in California Superior Courts for selling heroin were sent to prison... 1,268 were convicted for armed robbery, and 500 did not go to prison... 254 ex-convicts were convicted and sentenced for possession of a deadly weapon, but only 40 went to prison." (Many, however, did go to county jails.)

Senator Marler and Attorney General Younger are proposing a bill aimed at closing a provision of the California Penal Code which gives a judge discretion to grant probation to armed robbers when the judge finds "unusual circumstances." The Senator stated that the so-called "unusual circumstances" are usually conjured up by defendants, thus a large number of armed robbers are turned loose on probation.

Our letters from home would indicate that the majority of people in Monterey County would feel there is merit in such a proposal and I would agree.

Enuf for now BOB WOOD

P.S. I'm sure many of you have stopped on Highway 80 on your way north to eat at the Nut Tree, about 15 miles or so south of Davis (to those of you who haven't, you should, it's worth the effort) As you enter the dining room there is a huge glass aviary on both sides rising 50 feet in the air stocked with beautiful exotic birds of all colors and descriptions. Last week my wife Betsey and I stopped to eat lunch at the Nut Tree and as our waitress seated us I thought I heard a small boy at the next table say, "I would sure like to have an apricot cobbler." I turned to Betsy and said, "Boy, it sure is good to hear the younger generation ask for apricots." (I think most of you are aware that we - the Bank and I - have 60 acres of apricots near Greenfield.) She looked at me a little perplexed and promptly said, "you must be getting deaf. I heard the boy and he said to his Mom he sure would like to have an apricot warbler," which turned out to be one of the exotic birds which were flying around in the huge glass aviary.

Circulate petitions for new fire district

PETITIONS are now being circulated in mid-Carmel Valley asking the Board of Supervisors to change County Service Area No. 59 into a fire district.

The five-man advisory board for CSA No. 59 is seeking the change in legal status on the grounds it will speed up the timetable for construction of a new fire station on land donated by the Carmel Valley Manor.

There would be no change in the present $1 tax rate.

The service area was formed last July to provide fire protection for the mid-Valley, extending from Rancho Fiesta Road on the east to the San Carlos Rancho Road on the west.

At present, CSA 59 has a contract with the State Division of Forestry to provide a truck and two-man crew to respond to calls within its boundaries.

This is considered a temporary measure until a fire station can be built and equipped in the mid-Valley.

Carmel Valley Manor has donated a two-acre parcel, fronting on Carmel Valley Road across from Carmelo School, but the service area has not been able to do anything with it because it is prevented, by law, from borrowing money to pay for construction.

Assessed value for the area is $8,388,000, much less than the assessed value in the neighboring Carmel Valley Fire Protection District on the east or CSA 43 on the west.

IF THE STATUS of CSA 59 is changed to a fire district, it will have the legal power to borrow money and proceed with plans to purchase a fire truck and build a station.

The Local Agency Formation Commission recommended the change to a fire district following a public hearing on Feb. 27.

If advisory board members obtain approximately 600 signatures, or 51 percent of the number of voters who voted in the 1970 gubernatorial election, the petitions will be submitted to the Registrar of Voters for validation. When the petitions are certified, the Board of Supervisors can act to create the fire district.

It will still be necessary to hold an election within the district to select directors and confirm the $1 tax rate.

Anyone wishing to sign the petition should contact the advisory board members: Bill Brown, Mike Tancredi, Ed Haber, Skip Marquard or Steve Thigpen.

Carmel school candidate

Mrs. Gaver stresses quality, equality

(This is the fourth in a series of interviews with candidates who are running for seats on the board of trustees of the Carmel Unified School District. Two vacancies will be filled in an election April 17.)

By PAT GRIFFITH

FRAN GAVER is someone who just naturally becomes deeply involved in schools and community affairs.

Her interests have focused there since the days she was earning a B.A. in political science at Wellesley College. Later she acquired a certificate in public administration from the Universities of Alabama, Tennessee and Kentucky, and, finally, a master's degree in political science at the University of Pittsburgh.

She spent three years as assistant test editor of Educational Testing Service in Princeton, N.J., and 18 months as a part-time assistant in the anthropology department at the University of Pittsburgh.

She has followed the progress of her daughter, Liz and twins Don and Bill through public schools in Pittsburgh and Berkeley, volunteering to serve in a variety of roles along the way.

Three years ago her husband accepted a professorship at the Naval Postgraduate School. As soon as the family was settled in their home on Brookdale Drive in lower Carmel Valley, Mrs. Gaver plunged into several school-related activities here.

She has been a volunteer tutor for the Monterey Peninsula Unified School District, has worked on the music committee of the Lyceum of the Monterey Peninsula, and has served on the citizens' curriculum committee on reading for the Carmel Unified School District.

She is president of the Carmel Middle School Parent-Faculty Club and has been taking the special course for volunteers in the remedial reading program under Dr. Jo Brazell.

And now, a vivacious 43, she is running for the school board. Her motivation is not one of strong disagreement with any particular policy or program, but rather "a very strong concern for an equality of education for students, particularly at the high school, and also for the quality of education."

Her contact with the high school (her daughter went there as a freshman, then transferred to Santa Catalina School at her own request) has convinced her that "it's very hard to say all our high school students should do anything, because we have such a diverse high school population."

She thinks it is "possible" for a student to go through Carmel High and get a good academic background that will lead to a top-quality university, "but I really don't know that the way is made very clear for them to do this. Nor is it necessarily challenging."

AMONG THE SKILLS she feels college-bound students should acquire is the ability to do competent research.

"I think a graduating senior who is going to college should be comfortable with a research project. He should be able to identify a problem area, narrow it down to manageable proportions, research it and come to conclusions and be able to express them."

She sees this skill as one which should be stressed primarily in the English and social science departments.

In the course of attending some 15 coffee hours to further her candidacy, she has found many parents who are bewildered by the array of classes offered at the high school.

"There isn't a clear enough understanding of what some of the courses really involve, and I think some of the bad feelings towards the high school come from that," she comments.

"I think we need to offer choices, but make it clear just what the choices are. It's really important that the counseling staff makes clear what the choices are leading to."

As an example, she cites the case of one girl who thought she was enrolling in a college-prep biology course, only to discover the class was actually on how to survive in the wilderness.

"I think there may be a good reason for offering a class in survival in the wilderness at Carmel High School, but I think it should be very clear that that is what is being taught," she explains.

She is also concerned at the trend towards finishing high school in three years.

"I'd like to know more about who is finishing early, and why," she says. "If it is because we're not offering them enough to keep them interested for four years, I feel we should rethink what we're doing."

"I'm really not in favor of encouraging kids to finish in three years. I really don't see it as desirable. A lot aren't ready to leave home and go off to college after three years. We should offer enough variety in our high school to provide an exciting four years here."

Beyond quality in education, she wants equality for those students -- possibly 20 per cent or more of the senior class -- who will not go on to college, or who will attend Monterey Peninsula College and then stop.

"The only way to get a quality vocational program is for it to be Peninsula-wide, which means working with the other school districts."

"We need to think beyond a certain specific course to a whole program, a vocational curriculum that leads into jobs that actually exist.

"I think the most fruitful thing would be to feed into the vocational programs offered at MPC, because there's no reason to duplicate what they have."

"I think this is the general direction in which we're moving, and I'm for it. It is a very logical way to go."

AT CARMEL MIDDLE SCHOOL, where her sons are now eighth graders, she has sensed "a great improvement in morale" among students and faculty this past year.

"Our parent advisory meetings have really been worthwhile," she adds enthusiastically.

She supports the changes in scheduling and curriculum proposed for Carmel Middle School next year, and is particularly happy to see reading recognized as a separate course.

Because her children have not attended elementary schools here, she has made it a point recently to visit several of the schools and to read of their history.

She was intrigued by the fact that the district's five elementary schools are so different.

"So it was really interesting to me to read the history of the Carmel Unified School District, and learn that Carmelo and Tularcitos and Captain Cooper all have a long history of being independent schools, which goes a long way towards explaining why there is such a feeling of independence now."

She sees this relative autonomy as both a strength and a weakness. The advantage comes, she feels, in the fact parents can have a very direct influence on the elementary school.

At the same time, she sees a need for teachers to have more time to meet with their colleagues in other schools so there can be a greater sharing of ideas and worthwhile programs.

The independence of the elementary schools also ties in with a larger problem which has been raised by teachers and students to whom she has spoken.

"This is a problem of curriculum articulation between levels, between the elementary grades and Middle School, and between Middle School and the high school."

"There ought to be a way to put together a curriculum that goes from level to level without having repetition."

As an example, she says, she knows of a student who took world history at the high school, only to find that four countries receiving special emphasis were countries he had already studied at Middle School.

On some things Mrs. Gaver has questions, not suggestions.

"For instance," she asks, "since about 10 per cent of our high school juniors and seniors are taking at least one course at MPC to fill out their curriculum, I wonder if the district has an obligation to provide transportation there? Or are we saying to our students that you can only go to MPC if you have a car?"

Because students are enrolled in everything from calculus to ornamental horticulture from morning until late evening, she acknowledges that transportation is a problem difficult to resolve.

"I HESITATE to recommend anything because I don't have the figures on costs. But would it be possible to have a shuttle bus operate on some kind of a circle route during the day? It could get kids to and from MPC and could also make it easier for high school students to get to the elementary schools to assist as tutors or aides."

"I don't know that this is possible," she emphasizes. "But I'd like to find out."

Because of her own long involvement in schools, she is strongly supportive of any program that will elicit more parental and community involvement -- in curriculum planning, in classroom assistance, in opportunities for field trips.

She has recommended a standing citizens' advisory committee, perhaps one parent from every parent club in the district, be chosen to consult with the school board on a regular basis and relay information to the various schools.

She would also like to see someone coordinate volunteers for all the schools, to make better and wider use of the talents of people in the community.

This is her first time ever running for public office, and so far she has enjoyed the experience "much more than I thought I would."

She feels she has an advantage in that she is not tied to an 8 a.m. - 5 p.m. job.

"I think it's a real asset. I have time during the day to devote to being on the school board. I can visit schools during the day, and talk to students and teachers and observe in classes and attend meetings. I think this is very important for someone who is on the school board. The fact that I am free to do this is a real advantage."

If she is elected, however, she faces one personal disadvantage.

About 10 years ago she started playing the recorder in Pittsburgh, and has been playing with a local group "for our own amusement and amazement" since coming to Carmel.

Her recorder group meets on Wednesday nights, "which is why I haven't been going to school board meetings in the past."

But if elected, she vows, the school board will take precedence -- every other Wednesday night, which is when they meet.

WORKJOB SEMINARS

During January and February over fourteen parents, under the direction of Parent's Club President Mrs. Jean Westcott, volunteered their time and talents to assist us in developing instructional materials. The Workjob seminars were designed to produce over one hundred learning activities for our 5, 6 and 7 year olds, in the area of language and mathematics development. Parents met for an orientation meeting which described the activities and the materials needed to accomplish the tasks. Our parents collected materials and production was started at our second seminar. Mrs. Betty Roth, Alpha teacher, coordinated the production seminars which were highly successful.

The activities called "workjobs" provide students with learning tasks in the form of manipulative activities. Each activity is built around a single concept. In Language Development, four areas of concentration were developed: perception, matching, classification, and sounds and letters. Efforts in mathematics concentrated on sets, number sequences, combining and separating groups and relationships.

We know that our students begin school with a wide range of language experiences. They have different abilities and different needs. To provide all students the same learning experience would disregard an understanding of individual differences.

"Workjobs" has helped us provide many experiences for students. Through this type of individualizing we are more able to meet their needs. We certainly could not have produced the activities without the assistance of our parents.

READING: OUR MOST IMPORTANT TASK

Without a doubt, reading is the most important area of our curriculum. It is a vital part of every student's day. Our program has two main objectives: (1) To help our students develop the power to read independently. (2) To stimulate our students to build an interest in reading a variety of material on a wide range of topics.

In order to meet the objectives we diagnose frequently to determine the skills acquired by our students and what skills need special attention. After diagnosing we develop an instructional plan that will help the student master the skills necessary to become an independent reader. Of course, an important part of our program is evaluation. Constant evaluation procedures are used so as to provide the student with maximum learning opportunities. Various approaches are used; thus, designing alternate roads to the teaching of reading.

For years I have felt there is no one panacea to the teaching of reading. The approaches used are selected according to the needs of the student. All students receive a skills program which generally uses the materials from the state adopted textbooks.

There are different approaches to the teaching of reading. Some people believe the phonics approach to be the only way, while others feel the sight approach is the answer. This approach involves showing the student a printed word, telling him the word and using the word in a short story. This brings meaning to the word and helps the student memorize it for future reference.

In contrast, the purely phonetic approach would teach the student the sounds for each letter of the alphabet, ("buh" for b, "cuh" for c and so on). The student then "sounds out" strange words letter by letter and sound by sound.

I think it's quite obvious that a student can memorize only so many words. If he has a short memory the sooner the sight approach falls apart. The pure phonetic approach not only slows the reader but often leads him to a bad habit of converting print to sound without considering meaning.

Our approaches at Carmelo do not represent one or the other of these two extremes. The language experience approach is a good example. Students begin using sight vocabulary which has been developed in the home and community -- brand names, signs, labels, words on television, etc. Teachers use these sight words as "starters" to which they add words.

The phonics approach is an integral part of each day's learning. Students learn the relationships between sounds they say and the symbols used to represent that sound. Phonics, then, is taught as a natural, normal experience of talking. Later writing is involved.

Through language experience in reading students soon realize that what they think about they talk about. They discover what they say can be written down. Almost always they realize that what they can write they can read. After a short time students find out for themselves that what other people have written they are also able to read.

The role of the parent is a very important one in the teaching of reading. Parents set the example by their own conduct. Certain work habits are learned in the home. Attitudes toward work and the responsibility acquired at home contribute to the success in reading at school. Parents need to continue those activities in both work and play which will help the student in reading at school. The environment at home needs to reinforce the desire to read. By being readers and by reading to children parents help create a healthy environment.

One last comment which needs to be mentioned -- Continue to be positive!

PUBLIC SCHOOLS WEEK - APRIL 9-13

Visitors are welcomed at Carmelo during Public Schools Week. When arriving please stop by the office and sign our guest register. Our "Back To School Night" has been scheduled for Thursday, April 12, at 7:00 p.m. Students will demonstrate various activities in the classrooms at 7:15. Adults will gather at 7:00 p.m. in the Learning Center for Election of Officers (Parent-Faculty Club) and then visit the classrooms in session. The public is cordially invited to attend.

THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

By REVEREND DOUGLAS F. KEATING
Pastor, Our Lady of Mt. Carmel
Carmel Valley, California

GOD SO LOVED THE WORLD...

Perhaps these words encapsule, as it were, the whole message of both Lent and the Christian experience. In any event this is the season in which to reflect seriously on their content.

Some years ago a play called "Inherit the Wind" was made into a movie and later, no doubt, seen often on the late T.V. The story revolves around the true account of one John Scopes, high school teacher, who in 1925 violated an old law of Tennessee by teaching evolution in the high school biology class.

He was especially accused of having said: "God made man in his own image and likeness and man returned the compliment." The implication was that man had dragged God down to his own level by attributing to him human characteristics.

Whether he ever really made that statement is uncertain, but its implication is true regarding many religions. It is only natural for people groping to understand God to think of him in anthropomorphic terms.

Ancient pagans thought of their gods as being ambitious, jealous, even lustful.

In opposition to their pagan neighbors, the Israelites of the Old Testament maintained a faith in one true God, a transcendent being prior to and exalted above the universe, spiritual and perfect in every way. They arrived at this notion, not through groping, but through supernatural revelation from God himself.

Of course that revelation was necessarily expressed in human words and in reference to human traits, but far from presenting a god in the likeness of man, that revelation formed an image of God by means of contrast with human imperfections. Where man was small and petty, God was big and generous. Where man was vindictive and hateful, God was forgiving and loving.

Here is an example of the contrast between God and human beings. For human beings there is always a limit to endurance, the last straw. A husband or wife may forgive a single infidelity on the part of a spouse, but repeated affairs are more than anyone can put up with.

Not so with God. God looked upon his chosen people as his spouse, but in spite of their repeated infidelities he never gave up on them. In fact the Old Testament is largely a story of the almost incredible patience of God.

But it took the New Testament revelation in Jesus Christ to bring out how much God really loves the world. St. John in his Gospel makes reference to the Jews of old who in their journey through the desert had to make a detour. They grumbled against God and Moses. The biblical account tells how God punished them by sending poisonous snakes among them. Then in his mercy he commanded Moses to make a bronze serpent and erect it as a standard. Gazing on this standard in faith lifted up by Moses saved them.

Jesus saw in the lifting up of the serpent a type or sign of his own lifting up on the Cross. He said, "Just as Moses lifted up the serpent in the desert, so must the son of man be lifted up, that all who believe may have eternal life in him."

Then St. John comments, "Yes, God so loved the world that he gave his only Son."

All through the Old Testament God had shown his love through men like Moses and by means of merciful incidents like that of the bronze serpent.

But in the fullness of time God manifested even greater love in the degree that Jesus is greater than Moses and to the extent that his being lifted up on the cross is greater than the lifting up of the bronze serpent in the desert.

St. Paul, a man steeped in the Old Testament, was almost overwhelmed with the magnitude of God's love as shown in the person of Jesus Christ. Almost in ecstasy he cried out, "God is rich in mercy; because of his great love for us he brought us to life with Christ when we were dead in sin. By this favour you were saved."

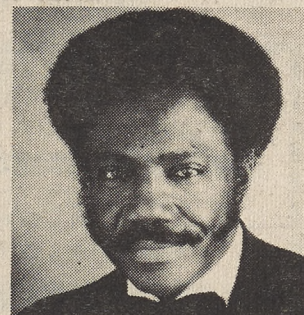

Despite a long history of human perversity, "God did not send his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world might be saved through him." That kind of love is beyond human imagining. And God does not change. He still has that kind of love for us.

Perhaps you might say this picture of God makes him out to be too soft or weak. Perhaps the problem is that deep down we know that we ourselves cannot even begin to be as patient and forgiving as God is. Though we would like to be unselfish and generous we realize that our love for others does not come anywhere near the kind of love God has for us. Subconsciously we fall into the mistake of trying to make God in our own image and likeness.

We can begin to have an idea of God's love, not by looking at ourselves, but by turning in faith toward the image of Jesus Christ lifted up on the Cross.

GARDENING NEWS

From the Carmel Valley
Garden Association

It has finally happened! We've had some spells of sunny weather between the everlasting rains, and officially it is Spring. Time to leave the cozy hearth and the well thumbed seed catalogues, and go forth to see what the rains and frosts have wrought.

Daffodils and narcissus had poked up through the layers of dead leaves and were blooming in the sunshine. Many of the subtropicals I had thought were gone forever, were showing signs of new life. So I tackled the job of removing the soggy mass of leaves and found that literally hundreds of snails were hiding in the debris. It took hours to eliminate them, and I thought I'd done a thorough job. So -- full of desire for an instant beautiful garden that was intensified by the long, grey winter, I bought flats of bedding plants. The long wait for seeds to grow did not suit my mood. Alas! The next day there were only forlorn stubs of stems left of what had been delphiniums, Iceland Poppies and Snapdragons. I realized that a snail population explosion can not be quelled by the handplucking method, alone. Knowing that the Organic Gardener would never stoop to using poison in the garden, I sought advice. I was told to get Bantam Chickens, or ducks -- or even geese. These friendly fowl would gobble up every snail on the place. I couldn't see our cats and Bantam chicks sharing the same half-acre, and the ducks and/or the geese could be a hazard to themselves, and to traffic too, if they wandered out on Carmel Valley Road. Anyway, we aren't the kind of people who walk around methodically watching every place we put our feet. Then some one suggested putting saucers of stale beer around the garden. Snails like beer, they said, and would drink themselves to death. It turned out our dog and neighboring dogs like beer too. The snails never got a chance to tinkle.

Finally, I read that some important dignitary in the Department of Agriculture suggested we could rid ourselves of snails by eating them. With the high price of meat these days, he said, we could save on our food budget, and still function as organic gardeners. After thinking this over, I came to the conclusion that I would bet my prize rosebush that his wife would never spend days purging snails, cooking them and serving them at her family dinner table!

So, with a box of snail eradicator in hand, I set about the grim task, only to have a thought flash through my mind. Years ago, when I started studying Dynamic Symmetry, we were told that the snail was the perfect example of the Spiral of Life. "Oh, no!" I thought, "I am about to poison the Spiral of Life!" Then I looked at the sad remains of the bedding plants and said a little prayer to Mother Nature. "I want to be a good organic gardener. I really do try. But sometimes, Mother Nature, you test me too far. Amen."

The next meeting of the Carmel Valley Garden Association will be held on April 12 at 8 p.m. in Room 27 of the Tularcitos School. This will be our last meeting before our flower show on May 5. With this thought in mind, we asked Mrs. Ruth Allaire to be our guest speaker. Mrs. Allaire is the "R" in R&M dried and fresh flower arrangements that have been so popular all over California. She will demonstrate flower arranging using flowers that we will find in our own gardens, instead of florist flowers. But she will show us the new methods florists use, and will have for sale the florist's gimmicks such as the oasis and wires that are hard for the layman to find. This should be very helpful to those who want to make arrangements for the show, or for our own homes. Everyone is welcome -- Come -- and bring a friend!

Dining Out on the Peninsula

TUCKED IN A QUIET CORNER of Pacific Grove, Maison Bergerac is a restaurant truly for the reminiscent Francophile. The sentimental diner who longs for the old-fashioned French restaurant of his youth, with none of these present-day affectations, will enjoy the cordial and civilized atmosphere which young chef, Monsieur Raymond Bergerac and his smiling wife and children offer. Old Oriental carpets, a collection of rare clocks, antiques in every room-- all these add to the charm of the old Victorian home which is Maison Bergerac. Try their Pate du Chef, Fish Quenelles with Normandy Sauce, or Caneton a l'orange. Reservations always necessary.

TOMORROW NITE the Crab Buffet starts at The Carriage House. Lore and her gremlins have put together a Friday nite feed you won't want to miss... prime rib, King Crab, assorted salads and vegetables... all you can eat for $5.95. This special buffet will be featured every Friday from 6 to 9:30 p.m. at The Carriage House.

THIS SUNDAY why not try the Sunday Brunch at Los Laureles Lodge and enjoy the friendly charm and western ranch flavor of this old California Rancho dating back to the early 1830's. The picture window in the dining room frames a view of the largest oak tree in the state -- estimated by experts to have been standing 150 years prior to the time Columbus discovered the New World! Featured in the Sunday Brunch from 11:30 a.m. are homemade popovers and preserves (by Jone), Eggs Benedict and a new treat, French Custard Toast.

SCAMPI -- jumbo shrimp sauteed in garlic butter, onions and parsley, and served with steamed rice... just another dinner feature at Mel and Robin's Hidden Village Restaurant and Coffee Shop. Located just down the street from California's First Theatre, across the alley from Pacific House this restaurant will remind you of a charming manor house of New Orleans style. Come and enjoy a leisurely dinner from 6-10 p.m., Sundays from 3-9 p.m. (Closed Mondays).

"MAMA MONTECCHI" prepares the minestrone soup at David Bindel's King's Cross Station in the old country traditional way. She also makes her own secret sauce for the spaghetti with homemade meatballs. Lunch at King's Cross Station is quite reasonable, featuring the 1/2 pound "Stationburger" with salad for only $1.50. Other delicious sandwiches, which are in addition to the Italian-flavor dishes... Roast Beef au jus, Canadian Bacon, Danish Ham & Cheese, and Pastrami.

GOOD SOUNDS come rockin' out of the Holiday Inn, Carmel every night Wednesday thru Sunday with the hourly sets by Afterglow. Everyone seems to be catching on to the idea that this is the place to go if you enjoy good lively music -- and especially if you like to dance! You can catch this Nevada-type lounge act at the Holiday Inn, Carmel from 9 p.m. to 1:30 a.m. No cover, no minimum.

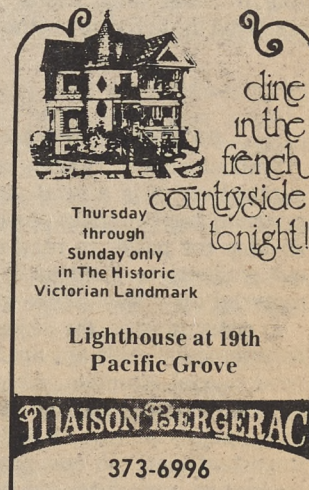

PAUL LUCIDO, your host at Summerhouse Restaurant, is now serving dinner from 5:30-10:00 p.m. Lucille Branson is in charge of the kitchen where she is preparing such entrees as: Fresh Filet of Sole, dusted lightly with a fine seasoned flour, delicately grilled in butter, and served with tartar sauce and a wedge of lemon; Veal Parmesan, choice cuts of veal tenderly breaded and baked, topped with Mozzarella cheese and served in a rich Italian Sauce; and Steak Diane, choice loin cuts of steak pounded thin and quickly sauteed in butter, then covered with a sauce of wine, rich herbs and shallots. For Reservations call 659-4544. Closed Tuesdays.

Wellesley Club

Wellesley Club members will meet at 1 p.m. tomorrow (Friday) at the home of Mrs. Harry Trinde, 25810 Rio Vista Drive.

Coffee and dessert will be served as final plans for the April 27 book sale are made.

Mrs. Robert Cox of Carmel, district chairwoman for the Wellesley College Development Fund, will report on her recent five-day trip to the college.

COMSAT sets new visiting hours

New public visiting hours from 1 to 3 p.m. on Wednesdays were announced this week for COMSAT's Jamesburg Earth Station.

Director John Scroggs said it was necessary to change the "drop in" visitor day to a weekday, because of the limited staff on duty on weekends makes it difficult to conduct tours then.

Scroggs said that special group tours for times other than Wednesday afternoons may be arranged by calling the station at 659-2293.

Flamenco guitar concert

Mariano Cordoba, one of Spain's best-known flamenco guitarists, will present a concert at 8 p.m. Saturday, April 14 at the White Oaks Theater in Carmel Valley. Cordoba was the featured guitarist for Madrid's Antonio Ballet, and toured the world with that company as part of a cultural exchange program. Cordoba was born in a Castilian village in the province of Guadalajara, and started learning how to play the guitar after hearing Manuel Santos, the local barber, play his guitar.

"Several months later, I made my debut as a guitarist with a flamenco cantador, Pepe de Huelva," Cordoba says. He continued playing guitar during the Spanish Civil War to help support his family after the death of his father.

Cordoba studied with Maestro Nogales, practicing eight hours a day, and then began performing with small professional groups. In 1952, Cordoba met Antonio, whom he describes as "The greatest flamenco dancer of them all." He joined Antonio's Company as guitarist and played in Europe and the United States.

He settled in San Francisco in 1956, and signed a contract with Capitol Records. He also has published books on flamenco music and enjoys teaching guitar.

Tickets for the concert are available from the Guitar Shop, Dolores and 5th Avenue, the Thunderbird Book Shop in Carmel Valley, and Abinante's Music Store in Monterey.

MONTEREY COUNTY SPCA

Many of us are well acquainted with the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (SPCA) and its functions. We are, however, in the minority. I would like to clarify misconceptions, misinterpretations and misunderstandings.

Your Monterey County SPCA is supported solely by donations, membership dues, and $500 given monthly by the county. Their expenses are $9,000 a month, and are increasing daily. The SPCA is a separate entity unto itself, locally administered, in each city or county. Its purpose is to prevent pain, fear, and suffering of animals. If you read or hear adverse publicity about the SPCA in an area other than Monterey County, please be assured that your Monterey County SPCA is in no way connected with that particular SPCA, Humane Society, etc. If you read or hear about an SPCA in another city or county receiving large endowment, it does not mean that the Monterey County SPCA shares in the endowment.

The Monterey County SPCA submitted an animal population control program to the board of supervisors recently. SPCA supports the program in principle and will supervise its implementation, but cannot support it monetarily -- it can only assist.

Individuals who give money to the SPCA to alleviate the suffering of animals are not eccentric people haters. They are usually people who are concerned with helpless creatures, whether they be man or beast. Their monies are contributed cheerfully in both areas.

The SPCA does not destroy animals indiscriminately. They destroy humanely when necessary (this is an all-important factor). Government funded animal shelters have neither the time nor money to be overly concerned about humane killing of animals. They have a job to do and they do it.

Because the SPCA is a charitable institution its employees and volunteers are working there because they love animals and want to help them. Badly injured and diseased animals are destroyed, as are animals for whom SPCA has made an effort to find good homes. They just don't have the space or staff to keep every animal until it dies of old age -- they handle thousands of animals every year -- an average of 50 per day, with an average placement rate of only 5 percent.

The SPCA and its director, Mrs. May, are literally working night and day to effect new laws in the legislature to protect animals from wanton killing, exploitation, and neglect. They must uphold the written laws now in effect, regardless of their private views. The recent ferret publicity was a good example. The SPCA encourages private citizens to do what they can to get "bad" laws off the books, but be sure you understand the reason for the law before making any attempt to change it.

Publicizing cruel and inhumane treatment of animals is the only way to arouse people from their apathy. Not long ago the SPCA was notified too late of a horse that was allowed to starve to death -- his "home" was a fenced area on a busy street corner in Marina. Many people were aware of his plight but didn't want to get involved, so no one reported it until it was too late. We can't continue to turn away from unpleasant facts. Sometimes the "shock treatment" is necessary.

The SPCA wants to find good homes for their animals. The questions they ask regarding fenced yards, shelters from the weather, preventive injections, spaying and neutering, the reasons for wanting a pet (people who are looking for watch dogs or cat "mousers" are not necessarily animal lovers), are asked with the animal's welfare in mind. Most of their animals have been rescued from unbearable circumstances -- the SPCA doesn't want them thrown back into similar situations.

Any home is not always better than no home. Be aware of the reasons for the questions and please do not resent them. If you visit the shelter you will see many graphic displays of the cruelties animals suffer at the hands of uncaring owners. If you were to hear of these cruelties I'm sure you wouldn't believe them, but the actual photographs are there for all to see.

Most of the workers at the SPCA are young volunteers. They must be at least 14 years of age to qualify. If your child loves animals and is willing to work hard for a good cause, you might have him or her contact the SPCA. I can't think of a better way to teach children discipline, tolerance, and understanding than by having them watch and care for animals.

The SPCA is vitally interested in educating children to the needs of animals. They send their humane education director to talk to the children, show them slides and movies, and prepare them for field trips to the SPCA shelter. By reaching children where animals are concerned, the SPCA feels that some day people will have a better understanding of the value of all life.

Aside from certain facts, this article is not intended as irrefutable dogma. It is merely an attempt to promote understanding of an organization for which I have the greatest respect. My remarks about government funded animal shelters are meant in the broad sense. There are, of course, exceptions.

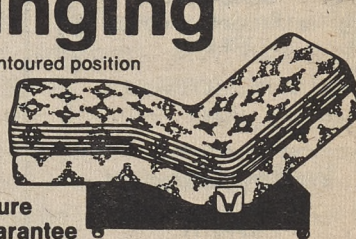

The SPCA will gladly send or give you a more comprehensive report on their services if you request them to.

Wells Fargo seeks Valley branch

Wells Fargo Bank has asked the Comptroller of the Currency for permission to establish a branch office near the intersection of Highway 1 and Carmel Valley Road.

If approval is granted, the proposal would then go before the Monterey County Planning Commission for review. It would be the 14th Wells Fargo bank in Monterey County, and the 299th in California.

Peter Wright, vice president and manager of the Carmel Wells Fargo Bank, said the proposal is for a "full service branch in Carmel Valley," but said he is not aware of specific plans for construction.

These would be drawn up if approval is granted by the Comptroller of the Currency he said.

Red Cross needs donations

The Carmel chapter of the American Red Cross is about half-way in its efforts to raise $36,703 in operating funds for the year.

A fund-raising drive was started in March, but the chapter has been successful in raising only some $18,000 to date, says Dorothy von Meier, executive director.

The local chapter operates three ambulances for the Carmel, Carmel Valley and Big Sur areas, which results in annual operating expenses of some $6,000.

The Red Cross also spent some $4,000 in recent months assisting the village of Big Sur, which has been ravaged by heavy rains and mud slides.

The chapter also operates water safety programs, and blood donations, which require funds. The chairman of the fund-raising campaign is Peter Wright of Wells Fargo Bank.

Contributions may be made by contacting the Red Cross at Box AR, Carmel.

Solicitors in the Carmel area have been: Carmel residential-Mr. and Mrs. Richard Dial; Carmel Valley business-Dave Redman; Carmel Rancho business-Jerry Johnson; Carmel business, Troy Petty and Vic Pankowski; Carmel Valley, Leslie Collins; Carmel Center-Joe Redola; Big Sur-Charles Mohn; Pebble Beach-Jack Adams.

Richard Dial and was composed of captains George Van Seiver, Albert Molendyk, Nelo Drizari, Roland T. Davis, Carvel Baldwin, Mrs. W. Ray Junk, Mrs. Anthony Klepich, Mrs. Robert Swanston, Mrs. Thomas Groark, Mrs. Betty Fowlston, Mrs. Ruth Perry, Mrs. Allen Williams, Mrs. Richard Robinson, Mrs. Leonard Cohen and Mrs. Gregg McKee.
